FROM OUR FOUNDER

The center was created to build a stronger bridge between our nationally ranked faculty, other public finance scholars, and the broader community of public finance experts at the state and local level. Although the center is non-partisan, faculty and practitioners from the Andrew Young School and around the nation are invited to share insights about public policies on state and local finance, education finance, economic development and urban policy, as part of an open dialogue about what we know, what we don't know and whether we are asking the right questions. You are invited to learn more by visiting the website, reading the blog and engaging with the center on social media. -- Carolyn Bourdeaux
